The King of Saxony made a triumphant entry into Dresden yesterday; he is dining with me to-day.

14th. I have precise information as to Blucher's movements; he is marching on Bautzen by the Breslau road. The Russians and Prussians are said to be together. Their rearguard shows 30,000 men with many guns, and is covering the little city of Bautzen.

15th. The Prince of the Moskowa and General Lauris-ton started two days ago from Torgau to turn Bautzen.

17th. Information from every quarter shows conclusively that the enemy is resolved to fight.

(To Francis I, Emperor of Austria.) I am deeply touched by the sentiments of personal interest in me expressed by Your Majesty, which I reciprocate and (therefore) deserve. If Your Majesty is interested in my happiness, let Your Majesty promote it. If it be necessary I am resolved to die at the head of all generous Frenchmen rather than become the laughing-stock of the English, and help my enemies triumph. Your Majesty should consider the future and not destroy the results of three years' friendship, nor sacrifice the happiness of the present generation to petty considerations, — why should I not say the happiness of a most sincerely attached part of Your Majesty's own family. I hope Your Majesty will never doubt my entire devotion.

(Instructions for General Caulaincourt.) Let me know, from headquarters, what is said. By finding out the views of the Emperor Alexander we will end by coming to an arrangement. In any case, my intention is to build him a golden bridge to escape from the intrigues of Metternich. If I am to make sacrifices I prefer
